

nothing to report

0

Submission of the B.C. CEDAW Group

To the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

A Report on Progress in Implementing Priority Recommendations made by the Committee in its 2008 Concluding Observations on Canada

JANUARY 2010

nothing to report

O

THE B.C. CEDAW GROUP IS A COALITION of women's non-governmental and non-profit British Columbia organizations that are committed to advancing the equality interests of women and girls.

THE B.C. CEDAW GROUP MADE SUBMISSIONS to the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at the time of its reviews of Canada in 2003 and 2008.

THE B.C. CEDAW GROUP ALSO MADE SUBMISSIONS to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in 2006, and participated in the preparation of the Canadian non-governmental report for the United Nations Human Rights Council's Universal Periodic Review of Canada in 2009.

THE GOAL OF THE COALITION is to ensure that governments in British Columbia comply with their human rights obligations to women.

THE 2010 B.C. CEDAW GROUP INCLUDES:

The Poverty and Human Rights Centre
Aboriginal Women's Action Network
Coalition of Child Care Advocates of B.C.
Hospital Employees' Union
Justice for Girls
Women's Housing Equality Network
North Shore Women's Centre
Vancouver Committee for Domestic Workers and Caregivers Rights
Vancouver Rape Relief and Women's Shelter
Canadian Association of Sexual Assault Centres, B.C. and Yukon Region
Vancouver Women's Health Collective
West Coast Women's Legal Education and Action Fund

THIS REPORT HAS BEEN ENDORSED BY:

Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs
Grand Chief Stewart Phillip
Grand Chief Ed John
Carrier Sekani Family Services
The Frank Paul Society
Walk 4 Justice
Antigone Foundation

nothing to report

O

ENDORSED BY (CONTINUED):

Battered Women's Support Services
B.C. Civil Liberties Association
BC Coalition of People with Disabilities
B.C. Government and Service Employees' Union
B.C. Federation of Labour
B.C. Federation of Retired Union Members
B.C. Teachers' Federation
Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives – B.C.
Canadian Office and Professional Employees Union, Local 378
Canadian Union of Public Employees, BC Division
Centre for Feminist Legal Studies, University of British Columbia (U.B.C.)
Gillian Creese, Director, Centre for Women's & Gender Studies (U.B.C.)
Child Care Advocacy Association of Canada
Directors Guild of Canada, British Columbia District
Ending Violence Association of BC
Federation of Post-Secondary Educators of BC
First Call: BC Child and Youth Advocacy Coalition
International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local 764
International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 258
International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 882
Oxfam Canada
Public Service Alliance of Canada, BC Division
The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, Moving Picture Technicians,
Artists and Allied Crafts, Local 891
United Steelworkers Union, District 3
United Steelworkers Union, Local 8223
UNITE-HERE Canada, Local 40
Women Against Violence Against Women

The B.C. CEDAW Group was assisted in the preparation of this submission by The Poverty and Human Rights Centre. Thanks are owed to Dani Bryant and Christian Morey for research assistance. Members of the B.C. CEDAW Group contributed to the content of this submission.

CANADA'S REPORT BACK

BY THE END OF NOVEMBER 2009, Canada was required to report back to the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) on steps it has taken to implement two recommendations made by the Committee after its review of Canada in 2008.¹ The two recommendations address issues of central concern to women in British Columbia:

- women's poverty and inadequate social assistance rates, and
- police and government failure to prevent or effectively investigate violence against Aboriginal women and girls.

The request that Canada report back to the CEDAW Committee in one year, rather than in the usual four years, highlights the seriousness of these issues.

■ MISSING AND MURDERED ABORIGINAL WOMEN AND GIRLS

In 2008, the UN CEDAW Committee wrote:

31. Although the Committee notes that a working group has been established to review the situation relating to missing and murdered women in the State party and those at risk in that context, it remains concerned that hundreds of cases involving Aboriginal women who have gone missing or been murdered in the past two decades have neither been fully investigated nor attracted priority attention, with the perpetrators remaining unpunished.
32. The Committee urges the State party to examine the reasons for the failure to investigate the cases of missing or murdered Aboriginal women and to take the necessary steps to remedy the deficiencies in the system. The Committee calls upon the State party to urgently carry out thorough investigations of the cases of Aboriginal women who have gone missing or been murdered in recent decades. It also urges the State party to carry out an analysis of those cases in order to determine whether there is a racialized pattern to the disappearances and take measures to address the problem if that is the case.

■ Facts

Aboriginal women in Canada report rates of violence including domestic violence and sexual assault, 3.5 times higher than non-Aboriginal women.² Also, young Aboriginal women are five times more likely than other Canadian women of the same age to die of violence.³

¹Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, 7 November 2008, Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women: Canada, CEDAW/C/CAN/CO/7, at paras. 14, 32, and 53.

²Violence against Aboriginal women and girls is well-documented in Canada. See Jodi-Anne Brzozowski, Andrea Taylor-Butts and Sara Johnson, "Victimization and offending among the Aboriginal population in Canada", Juristat. Vol. 26, no. 3, Canadian Centre for Justice Statistics, 2006. Online at: <http://dsp-psd.tpsgc.gc.ca/Collection-R/Statcan/85-002-XIE/85-002-XIE2006003.pdf>.

³Amnesty International, No More Stolen Sisters: The Need for a Comprehensive Response to Discrimination and Violence Against Aboriginal Women, September 2009, at 1. Online at: <http://www.amnesty.org/en/library/info/AMR20/012/2009/en>.

nothing to report

Aboriginal women and girls experience both high levels of sexual abuse and violence in their own families and communities, and high levels of stranger violence in the broader society.⁴

Aboriginal girls in British Columbia have also experienced sexual violence directly from officials of the justice system.

In British Columbia in 2006, Judge David Ramsay plead guilty to charges of procuring and sexual assault on four First Nations girls, who were between 12 and 16 at the time of his attacks, and who had all appeared before him in youth criminal court or family court. The RCMP began their investigation into Judge Ramsay's assaults after a complaint in August 1999. But Judge Ramsay was not removed from the Bench until 2002, three years after the investigation began. According to media reports his assaults continued until 2001.⁵

In March 2009, the Native Women's Association of Canada issued the second report of the Sisters in Spirit project documenting 520 known cases of Aboriginal women and girls who have gone missing or been murdered across the country over the last 30 years.⁶

The Native Women's Association of Canada points out that their documented number "likely does not reflect the actual number of missing and murdered Aboriginal women and girls in Canada."

Most cases included in the Sisters in Spirit database are those that have been:

- 1) reported to police/ media,
- 2) acknowledged by police/media, and
- 3) publicized by police/media.⁷

Walk 4 Justice has carried out a walk across Canada each summer for the last four years to talk with Aboriginal families and communities about missing women.

From anecdotal evidence, Walk 4 Justice believes that there are many more cases of missing and murdered Aboriginal women and girls that have gone undocumented by police or media.⁸ Most Aboriginal and human rights organizations agree that the count of missing and murdered Aboriginal women and girls is likely much higher.

⁴See Brzowski, supra note 2.

⁵Kelly A. MacDonald, Justice for Girls, Justice System's Response: Violence against Aboriginal Girls, submitted to: Honourable Wally Oppal, Attorney General of British Columbia, September 2005, at 12. Online at: <http://justiceforgirls.org/publications/pdfs/Violence%20against%20Aboriginal%20Girls%20-%20Final%20Brief%20-%20Sept%202005.pdf/20040213/newsPink.html>.

⁶Native Women's Association of Canada, Voices of Our Sisters in Spirit: A Report to Families and Communities, 2nd Edition, March 2009. Online at: http://www.nwac-hq.org/en/documents/NWAC_VoicesofOurSistersInSpiritII_March2009FINAL.pdf.

⁷*Ibid.* at p. 6.

⁸See: The Hook, "Walk 4 Justice demands answers to missing women cases". Online at: <http://theyee.ca/Blogs/TheHook/Aboriginal-Affairs/2009/06/05/Walk4JusticeMissingWomenCases>.

nothing to report

0

Of the 520 documented cases:

- 43 per cent of disappearances and 50 per cent of murders occurred during or since 2000,
- 26 per cent of the cases are in B.C. (137 women and girls),
- 24 per cent are cases of missing women and girls,
- 67 per cent are cases of murder (homicide or negligence causing death),
- 43 per cent of the murder cases remain open (no one has been charged),
- 52 per cent are women and girls under 30, and
- the majority of the missing and murdered women were mothers.

In British Columbia, since the mid-1990s 69 women have been reported missing from the Downtown Eastside, Canada's poorest neighbourhood. The majority of these women were Aboriginal. In 2001 Robert William Picton was charged with the murder of 26 women, and tried for the murders of six of them. In 2007, he was sentenced to life without parole. He is not expected to be tried for the murders of the other 20 women.

According to the official police count, 18 women and girls, half of them Aboriginal, have gone missing in the vicinity of Highway 16, the Yellowhead Highway, which runs from Manitoba to the Pacific Ocean through Northern B.C. This remote highway is now known as the 'Highway of Tears'. The count of 18, however, is also questioned. Victims' families and women's advocates claim the official list could be much longer. A recent investigation by a senior journalist with the Vancouver Sun newspaper revealed another 13 women and girls missing or murdered in the same area and in similar circumstances.⁹

■ Two Facets: Police Failure and Disadvantaged Social Conditions

Two facets of this problem have been identified by Aboriginal women, families, and non-governmental organizations, including the Native Women's Association of Canada, Amnesty International, the Canadian Feminist Alliance for International Action, and the Aboriginal Women's Action Network. These two facets are:

- the failure of police to protect Aboriginal women and girls from violence and to investigate promptly and thoroughly when they are missing or murdered; and
- the disadvantaged social and economic conditions in which Aboriginal women and girls live, which make them vulnerable to violence and unable to escape from it.

Both of these issues have been highlighted by various United Nations treaty bodies after reviews of Canada, including: the CEDAW Committee in 2008;¹⁰ the Commit-⁹Neal Hall, Vancouver Sun, "Vanishing Point: Women Missing or Murdered", Five Part Series, December 12 – 17, 2009. Online at: <http://www.vancouversun.com/news/vanished/index3.html>.

¹⁰*Supra* note 1, at paras. 13, 29 and 31.

nothing to report

O

tee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in 2006;¹¹ and the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination in 2007.¹²

Police Failure

In the face of overwhelming evidence of high levels of violence against Aboriginal women and girls, Canadian police forces have been slow, if not reluctant, to take this violence seriously.

Amnesty International reports that Canadian police and public officials have long been aware of a pattern of racist violence against Aboriginal women – but have done little to prevent it.¹³ Justice for Girls reported to B.C.’s Attorney General in 2005 that Aboriginal girls are targeted by violent men because of their vulnerability, including the vulnerability created by the lack of response of the police and courts to violence against them.¹⁴

There are also multiple reports in the media, and in the reports from the Native Women’s Association of Canada of the negative experiences that families, communities, and friends of missing Aboriginal women have had with police. From police personnel, they have experienced “a lack of responsiveness, disrespect, confusing or incorrect information, poor adherence to policies and protocols, and an overall discounting of family information.”¹⁵

Many family members or friends who report the disappearance of an Aboriginal woman or girl have been brushed off with justifications that blamed the women or discounted the family’s concerns, such as, “she has a high-risk life style” or “she’ll come back when she wants to.” Many of the cases did not receive timely or thorough investigation.¹⁶

Beverly Jacobs, President of the Native Women’s Association of Canada said to the media when presenting Sisters in Spirit’s second report, “it’s as if society is prepared to disregard the missing women as ‘garbage.’”¹⁷

In British Columbia there are currently two police task forces in operation:

¹¹ Concluding observations of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: Canada. UN Doc. E/C.12/CAN/CO/4, E/C.12/CAN/CO/5 (22 May 2006) at paras. 11(d), 15, 26.

¹² Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination: Canada. UN Doc. CERD/C/CAN/CO/18 (25 May 2007) at paras. 20-21.

¹³ Amnesty International, Stolen Sisters, Overview. Online at: http://www.amnesty.ca/campaigns/sisters_overview.php.

¹⁴ Kelly A. MacDonald, supra note 5, at 8.

¹⁵ NWAC, Voices, supra note 6, at 96.

¹⁶ Amnesty International, Stolen Sisters: Discrimination and Violence Against Indigenous Women in Canada, 2004, at 2 and 23 – 33. Online at: <http://www.amnesty.ca/campaigns/resources/amr2000304.pdf>; see also Voices, supra note 6, at 96.

¹⁷ Winnipeg Free Press, Mia Rabson, “Feds urged to stem tragedies”, May 1, 2009. Online at: <http://www.winnipegfreepress.com/local/feds-urged-to-stem-tragedies-44125677.html>.

nothing to report

O

- Vancouver Police Department – R.C.M.P. Project Even-Handed: A joint task force between the Vancouver Police Department and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (R.C.M.P.) was established in 2001. Project Even-Handed has a mandate to investigate and solve disappearances of women from the Downtown Eastside of Vancouver and surrounding areas between 1978 and 2001. As of March 4, 2009, there were 38 unsolved missing women cases that remain open investigations. At its peak 69 women were on the official list.
- E-PANA Coordinated Investigation Team: Formed in 2005 by E Division Criminal Operations of the R.C.M.P., E-PANA has a mandate to review the unsolved murders and suspicious missing persons cases linked to the ‘Highway of Tears’. E-PANA is currently investigating the disappearances or homicides of 18 women dating back to 1969. It has completed the review phase of incidents, and is now in its operational phase.

These task forces are dealing with cold files, reviewing individual incidents, and looking for possible links. This is an important job to do. But it is striking that there is no systemic response – either in the province or nationally.

Despite the known prevalence of violence against Aboriginal women and girls, there is no national database of information on missing and murdered women that identifies them by Aboriginal status and sex, nor is there any established pan-Canadian, or even intra-provincial, co-ordination among police forces. (In B.C., as in most provinces, there are several police forces operating – federal (R.C.M.P.), provincial and municipal.)

There are also no standard police protocols for dealing with missing and murdered Aboriginal women and girls, and no mandatory comprehensive training for all police personnel on this issue.¹⁸

No commission, task force, or judge in British Columbia has been appointed to inquire into the reasons for police inaction and delay, or into what steps, protocols, resources, co-ordination and training are necessary to ensure that Aboriginal women and girls receive effective protection from violence and the equal support and assistance of police agencies and the justice system.

Neither the Government of British Columbia nor the Government of Canada has taken responsibility for determining “the reasons for the failure to investigate the cases of missing or murdered aboriginal women” or for designing and implementing “the necessary steps to remedy the deficiencies in the system.”

¹⁸*Stolen Sisters*, 2004, supra note 16, at pp 23 – 33; see also Voices, supra note 6 at 101-102.

Disadvantaged Social and Economic Conditions of Aboriginal Women and Girls

When, in 2008, the Committee urged Canada to inquire into missing and murdered Aboriginal women, it also called on Canada to:

... develop a specific and integrated plan for addressing the particular conditions affecting Aboriginal women, both on and off reserves,... including poverty, poor health, inadequate housing, low school-completion rates, low employment rates, [and] low income...¹⁹

Such a plan is an essential component of any successful strategy to end the violence against Aboriginal women and girls.

The broad spectrum of poor socio-economic conditions faced by Aboriginal women is directly connected to both the issues on which Canada is required to report back, namely, violence against Aboriginal women and inadequate social assistance rates. Racialized patterns of poverty, lack of education and inaccessibility of adequate housing all contribute to the marginalization of Aboriginal women and their increased vulnerability to violence.

Poverty rates for Aboriginal women are extremely high. Canada's 2006 report on Women in Canada, whose figures are taken from the 2000 census, shows the poverty rate of Aboriginal women, including Indian, Inuit and Metis women, at 36 per cent – more than double that for non-Aboriginal women, and higher than Aboriginal men.²⁰

In addition, all of the other indicators of equality and well-being – educational attainment, health status, income level, housing adequacy, participation in paid work, and rates of child apprehension – reveal an entrenched pattern of inequality and dismal conditions of life for Aboriginal women and girls. These disadvantaged conditions are the legacy of colonialism, and a manifestation of systemic racism and sexism.

Disproportionate numbers of Aboriginal women and girls are in street prostitution in British Columbia. They experience very high levels of violence. Many Aboriginal women and girls are in street prostitution because of their impoverished conditions, and because of early experiences of violence and sexual abuse in their own communities, and in the broader society. Well-designed strategies are needed to support Aboriginal women and girls so that they can exit prostitution. Necessary resources include treatment beds in detoxification programs, recovery centres, funding for educational initiatives and job training, and funding for grassroots Aboriginal women's organizations.

¹⁹Concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women: Canada, CEDAW/C/CAN/CO/7, 7 November 2008, at para. 44.

²⁰Statistics Canada, Women in Canada 2005: A Gender-Based Statistical Report (2005), at 190-200. Online at: <http://www.statcan.ca/english/freepub/89-503-XIE/0010589-503-XIE.pdf>.

Also needed are: poverty elimination strategies, including provision of social assistance in an amount that will provide adequate food, clothing, and shelter; adequate housing for Aboriginal women and girls, both on and off reserves; culturally appropriate training and supports for education; shelter services for women in or near Aboriginal communities; and a change to policies regarding child apprehension to bring to an end the high rates of Aboriginal children being taken away from poor Aboriginal mothers.²¹

Conditions for Aboriginal women and girls will not change in British Columbia until strategic and co-ordinated policies are put in place to address and reverse the specific disadvantages of Aboriginal women and girls, and until adequate resources are allocated, over a sustained period, to support systemic change.

The failure by all levels of government in Canada to fulfill the social and economic rights of Aboriginal women and girls to an adequate standard of living, including adequate food, clothing and shelter, leads directly to violations of their rights to security of the person and to life.²²

Calls for Inquiry Ignored

The issue of police and government failures surrounding the murdered and missing Aboriginal women and girls has been on the desk of the Attorney General of British Columbia for many years now. Calls for a public inquiry came from family members of missing women from the Downtown Eastside of Vancouver, and from Vancouver Rape Relief and Women's Shelter starting as early as 2001.²³ In 2005, organizations – including Justice for Girls, the B.C. Native Women's Society, the First Nations Summit, and the Native Women's Association of Canada – called for a systemic inquiry into the failed criminal justice response to violence against Aboriginal girls in B.C.

Since then, as well as the B.C. CEDAW Group, the United Native Nations, which represents approximately 90,000 Aboriginal people, the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs, Walk 4 Justice, the Aboriginal Women's Action Network, the Carrier Sekani group of First Nations, the B.C. Civil Liberties Association, PIVOT Legal Society, and most recently, the Vancouver Police Department, have all called for a public inquiry into the failed law enforcement response to missing and murdered Aboriginal women and girls.²⁴

So far, the Government of British Columbia has not acted.

²¹See Voices, supra note 6, at 98-104.

²²Rights to security of the person and to life are set out in Articles 6 and 9 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which Canada ratified in 1976, as well as in s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

²³Vancouver Rape Relief and Women's Shelter, Daisy Kler, Speech on the 10th annual memorial for the missing and murdered women of the Downtown Eastside, February 14, 2001. Online at: http://www.rapereliefshelter.bc.ca/issues/eastside_women03.html; "Vancouver Rape Relief and Women's Shelter in Solidarity with Native Women on Call for Inquiry into Missing Women", Press Release April 12, 2002. Online at: http://www.rapereliefshelter.bc.ca/issues/eastside_women_pr.html.

²⁴See: B.C. CEDAW Group letter to Attorney General Wally Oppal, March 11, 2009. Online at: <http://www.justiceforgirls.org/publications/InquiryletterCEDAW2009.pdf>; see also: www.bccla.org/othercontent/09missing_women.pdf; <http://www.globalethbridge.com/Highway+Tears+inquiry+possible+attorney+general/2220244/story.html>; <http://www.missingjustice.ca/2009/06/activists-call-for-inquiry-into-the-highway-of-tears>.

■ SOCIAL ASSISTANCE RATES

In its 2008 Concluding Observations, the Committee wrote:

13. The Committee notes that federal funds to support social assistance are provided to provinces and territories through the Canada Social Transfer (CST) and welcomes information indicating that the CST budget increased in the past year and will continue to increase in future. Nevertheless, the Committee is concerned at the fact that decisions on expenditure of funds from the CST are completely at the discretion of the provinces and territories and that there is no federal accountability mechanism to ensure minimum standards across the country for the provision of funding to social assistance programmes for women. The Committee is also concerned at reports of cuts in social assistance schemes in many provinces and at the resulting negative impact on the rights of vulnerable groups of women, such as single mothers, Aboriginal women, Afro-Canadian women, immigrant women, elderly women and disabled women, who rely on social assistance for an adequate standard of living.

14. The Committee calls upon the State party to establish minimum standards for the provision of funding to social assistance programmes, applicable at the federal, provincial and territorial levels, and a monitoring mechanism to ensure the accountability of provincial and territorial governments for the use of such funds so as to ensure that funding decisions meet the needs of the most vulnerable groups of women and do not result in discrimination against women. The Committee also calls upon the State party to carry out an impact assessment of social programmes related to women's rights.

■ Poverty

B.C. has the highest overall rate of poverty in the country. In 2006, 13 per cent of all British Columbians, or over half a million people, lived below the poverty line, well above the national average of 10.5 per cent.²⁵

Statistics Canada figures show that in 2006, poor people in British Columbia were living not just below the poverty line, but $7,700 below the poverty line (using Statistics Canada's Low Income Cut-Off line). They are not just poor, they are very poor.²⁶

B.C. also has the highest rate of child poverty in Canada at 18.8 per cent – well above the national child poverty rate of 15 per cent (before-tax Low Income Cut-Offs (LICOs)).²⁷

²⁵Klein et al., The Time is Now: A Poverty Reduction Plan for BC, Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, 2008, at 5. Online at: http://www.policyalternatives.ca/sites/default/files/uploads/publications/BC_Office_Pubs/bc_2008/ccpa_bc_poverty_reduction_summary.pdf.

²⁶*Ibid.*

²⁷First Call, BC Child Poverty Report Card, November 24, 2009, Online at: <http://www.firstcallbc.org/pdfs/EconomicEquality/3-09reportcard.pdf>.

nothing to report

Particular groups of women have very high poverty rates.

In 2006, B.C. single mothers had a poverty rate of 35.7 per cent. In the same year, single senior women in B.C. had a poverty rate of 20.4 per cent (compared to 11.6 per cent for single senior men).²⁸

Nation-wide data show rates of poverty for Aboriginal women at 36 per cent, for women of colour at 29 per cent, for immigrant women at 23 per cent, rising to 35 per cent for those who arrived in Canada between 1991 and 2000, and for women with disabilities at 26 per cent.²⁹

■ Social Assistance Rates in British Columbia

In 2008, the B.C. CEDAW Group reported to the CEDAW Committee that:

- In 2002, the Government of British Columbia restructured and cut back provincial income assistance (welfare), instituting a number of regressive changes to eligibility as well as cuts to welfare rates.
- In 2006, a single person in B.C. received $510 per month; a lone parent with one child received $969. Taking inflation into account, these rates are lower than the benefits recipients received in 1994.
- In 2007, shelter allowances were raised by $50, plus an additional $50 for lone parents and single adults. In most cases these new rates remain lower than pre-2002 rates.

There has been no change in social assistance rates in B. C. since 2007.

■ Consequences

The Dieticians of Canada in their report The Cost of Eating in B.C. 2007 demonstrate that, at current rates, income assistance in British Columbia is too low to pay rent and buy healthy food.³⁰

Cuts to welfare rates and the erosion of the value of benefits through inflation have a harsh impact on women who are in need. And it is the women with the highest rates of poverty, including single mothers and Aboriginal women, who are most likely to have to turn to welfare.

²⁸Klein et al., A Poverty Reduction Plan for B.C., Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, 2008, at 21-22. Online at: http://www.policyalternatives.ca/sites/default/files/uploads/publications/BC_Office_Pubs/bc_2008/ccpa_bc_poverty_reduction_full.pdf.

²⁹Statistics Canada, Women in Canada: A Gender-Based Statistical Report (2005). Online at: <http://www.statcan.ca/english/freepub/89-503-XIE/0010589-503-XIE.pdf>.

³⁰Dieticians of Canada, The Cost of Eating in B.C. 2007, Media Backgrounder. Online at: http://www.dietitians.ca/news/frm_resource/imageserver.asp?id=1010&document_type=document&popup=true&contentid=1944.

nothing to report

O

Lacking the means of subsistence has well-documented gendered consequences:

- Women and girls lose autonomy in their relations with men. Women turn to “survival sex” or prostitution because welfare rates are so low;
- Women and girls living on inadequate welfare benefits live in squats, cars, and other unsafe housing and are more vulnerable to rape and sexual harassment;
- Women cannot leave abusive relationships because welfare rates are not sufficient to support them and their children. If they do leave, they often return for economic reasons, even when they are endangered;³¹
- Women receiving welfare are more likely to have their children apprehended, not because the children are mistreated, but because they cannot provide adequate housing and food.³²

The rate of child apprehension from mothers receiving social assistance and from Aboriginal mothers is high. Almost half of families from whom children are apprehended are either on income assistance or have recently been.³³ Also, while the number of non-Aboriginal children in state care has decreased, the number of Aboriginal children being taken into care continues to rise.³⁴

According to a recent study entitled Broken Promises: Parents Speak about B.C.'s Child Welfare System,³⁵ there are currently 9,271 children living in foster care in B.C., and more than half are Aboriginal. An Aboriginal child is around six times more likely to be taken into care than a non-Aboriginal child.³⁶

Children are rarely removed from their families because of physical or sexual abuse. Most often they are removed because of “neglect.” “Neglect” often means the effects of poverty – poor housing and inadequate food.³⁷

The B.C. Representative for Children and Youth documented the disastrous results that child apprehension can have in her report entitled Housing, Help and Hope.³⁸

A young First Nations couple, willing and able to nurture their two-month-old boy, needed short-term assistance with housing. Despite discretion in the system to help ³¹Klein et al., supra note 28, at 21.

³²Canadian Feminist Alliance for International Action, Women's Inequality in Canada, Submission of the Canadian Feminist Alliance for International Action to the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women on the Occasion of the Committee's Review of Canada's 6th and 7th Reports, September 2008, at 86-87.

³³Honourable Ted Hughes, BC Children and Youth Review, April 2006, at 52. Online at: http://www.mcf.gov.bc.ca/bcchildprotection/pdf/BC_Children_and_Youth_Review_Report_FINAL_April_4.pdf.

³⁴Klein et al. supra note 28, at 39.

³⁵D. Bennett and L. Sadrehashemi, Broken Promises: Parents Speak about B.C.'s Child Welfare System (2008), Pivot Legal Society. Online at: <http://www.pivotlegal.org/pdfs/BrokenPromises.pdf>.

³⁶B.C. Auditor General, Management of Aboriginal Child Protection Services (Victoria: Government of British Columbia, 2008), at 2. Online at: <http://www.bcauditor.com/files/publications/2008/report3/report/management-aboriginal-child-protection-services.pdf>.

³⁷*Ibid.*

³⁸Representative for Children and Youth, Housing, Help and Hope: A Better Path for Struggling Families, July 2009. Online at: <http://www.rcybc.ca/images/pdfs/reports/hhh-rpt-july-28-09.pdf>.

nothing to report

O

them, they did not receive it. Instead the child was apprehended and placed, over a period of months, in three different non-Aboriginal foster care homes. In the one of them he was injured and permanently brain damaged.

Today, at the age of three, the child has cerebral palsy, is blind in one eye, doesn't walk yet, and will need life-long supports.³⁹ The Representative for Children and Youth concluded that B.C. income assistance did not provide the family with enough income to afford housing that was considered acceptable.⁴⁰

Not only does the government fail to adequately support women living in poverty, the Ministry of Housing and Social Development (MHSD) requires the reduction of social assistance if children are apprehended. The housing portion of welfare is reduced if the children are taken into care, which makes it more difficult for women to afford adequate housing. Then, if she does not have adequate housing, her children will not be returned.

In short, along with its other harmful effects on women's equality in their relationships with men, their sexual autonomy, their health, and their security of the person, inadequate social assistance can cause women to lose the care and guardianship of their own children.

■ Poverty Reduction for B.C.

The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives developed a carefully reasoned and budgeted Poverty Reduction Plan for British Columbia, which calls on the Government of British Columbia to increase social assistance rates by 50 per cent and index them to inflation.⁴¹ The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives concluded:

If the global financial crisis draws B.C. into a prolonged economic downturn, the province's surpluses will shrink or disappear, but this, even more so, must not be an excuse for inaction. If the province finds itself in recession, the unemployment rate will increase and we risk a higher poverty rate, making the need for action that much greater. An accessible and decent social safety net (and in particular social assistance) must serve as an automatic stabilizer in such times – putting money in the pockets of those hardest hit, and concentrating that assistance in the communities hardest hit. (emphasis added)

The poorest women do not enjoy equality or security of the person in British Columbia. Until social assistance provides adequate incomes to women and their families when they are in need, the human rights of women will not be respected or fulfilled.

³⁹*Ibid.* at 1.

⁴⁰*Ibid.* at 35.

⁴¹Klein et al. supra note 28, at 39.

nothing to report

O

■ Impact Assessment

As well as restructuring social assistance to ensure that adequate levels of assistance are provided to women, the Committee's recommendation also urges Canada, and its various levels of government, "to carry out an impact assessment of social programmes related to women's rights." B.C. was specifically asked to do this by the Committee in 2003.⁴² However, since 2003 and even since 2008, the policy focus on women's issues has diminished dramatically inside the Government of British Columbia.

Before 2002, there was a Ministry of Women's Equality. In 2002, the women's portfolio was moved to the Ministry of Community, Aboriginal and Women's Services. In 2005, this Ministry became simply the Ministry of Community Services. As of 2008, following another Cabinet restructuring, the women's portfolio appears to be notionally included in the Ministry of Olympics and ActNow.

The fact is that women's equality and women's human rights have virtually vanished from the official policy agenda in British Columbia.⁴³

■ CONCLUSION

The Government of British Columbia has failed to act on either of these central issues:

- women's poverty and the lack of adequate social assistance, and
- police and government failure to prevent or effectively investigate violence against Aboriginal women and girls.

The Government of British Columbia stands in violation of its obligations under Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

⁴²Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, Twenty-eighth session (13 – 31 January 2003) and Twenty-ninth session (30 June – 18 July 2003), Fifty-eighth Session Supplement No. 38 (A/58/38), at paras. 359-60.

⁴³Gillian Creese and Victoria Strong-Boag, Still Waiting for Justice: Update 2009, at 8-9. Online at: http://www.bcfed.ca/files/1670-09br-Still_Waiting_for_Justice-2009.pdf.

